JOHNNY EVERNS NOW PLAYING THIRD AND WANTS TO BE FASTEST EVER

Chicago, Sept. 28.—Johnny Evers says he can follow the ball as well as has a new ambition. He wants to be faster. In the first game in Cincinnati, the fastest fielding third baseman the plate, but when he cracked out a three-base hit his confidence returned.

On the bases Evers is up to his old tricks, and he certainly keeps the opposing pitcher guessing. His attitude on the lines and his actions are perplexing and he causes the pitcher to waste ball after ball, thinking that he is going to steal or make some play with Sheppard, who follows him in the batting order.

His ambition then was to beat Bob Howell out of his place and become the greatest fielding and quickest-thinking infielder the National league ever possessed. For nearly ten years his ability was never questioned. Now he is determined to establish the same record at the far corner, where Harry Steinfeldt was recognized as among the best in the league ever had.

Until this season Evers never occupied third base with any regularity, in fact, he had played only one game there in his entire baseball career. That single instance was with the Cubs in 1904 against the Giants. Then he did not finish the game. He played only seven innings and was taken out by Frank Selee, who was then leader of the team and who was afraid Evers would be "killed" by the vicious drives Sandow, Merles, Dan McGraw, and Roger Bresnahan were smashing through his territory.

Evers was several pounds lighter than he is at present. He was credited with two stops that day that nearly knocked him over, but he was so agile that he recovered and got both runners at first. That same day George Brownie laid down a bunt. Evers came up fast, scooped the sphere, and struck the runner in the neck. Evers made no attempt to play third base after that.

He could play third base, Evers insisted, although he was anxious to get back in the game. His reason for not accepting the offer immediately was because he feared his throws would not be fast and strong enough from third to first. In playing second base the pegs are only one-third as long, and little strength is necessary. Chance knew what Evers could do in throwing, as he has a wonderful arm for a man of his size. The manager convinced him that he could cover the sack, and should try. Evers found that he could throw the ball just as easily as he did when he was at second. His throws may not have the speed, but the rapidity with which he gets the ball away offsets this. Besides, it is a straight underhand throw, and little time is lost.

Being out of the game practically four months has not dimmed Evers' batting eye in the least. He feared his eyesight would be affected owing to the many sleepless nights he spent while ill. Since he has been back he gets the ball away offsets this. Besides, it is a straight underhand throw, and little time is lost.

He picked up the first articles at hand, and provided the outside label is intact, it is a safe conjecture that somewhere will be found a mark beneath which is that tantalizing little expression "Trade-mark, Registered." The imagination of man has been stretched to the breaking point and all the names and figures of earth, air and heavens have been resorted to in endeavor to obtain a phrase that will catch and hold the public's attention.

The Number of Trade Marks.
Including the cases now pending, there are fully one hundred thousand devices either registered or to be registered at the patent office. And still Uncle Sam is busy amassing a file which bids fair to overflow to large rooms in recording the designs and names chosen. The last possible combination seems to have arrived, but straightforward others stick close to their heels and still others.

It was forty-one years ago, away back in 1870, that the first trade-mark act was passed. Since then two new have been made, and many of those first trade-marks are no longer in existence. The present law is soon to be changed and some changes are to be made in the manner of registration, the introduction of a fee and other modifications.

One of the simplest definitions ever given for the term trade-mark is "A trade-mark is one's commercial signature." Today that commercial signature has become so important a factor in business that it takes almost equal rank with the "good will" and should several large businesses conceive now in existence sell out their good will they could demand hundreds of thousands of dollars simply for these little devices that brought their products before the public.

It is a Simple Process.
When one desires to register a trade-mark he should send to the trade-mark division an application, consisting of a statement, petition and declaration. The first is a statement of the goods upon which it is desired to use the trademark; the petition is a request for its registration, and the declaration is an oath as to the truth of the preceding statements. With this must go a pen and ink drawing of the device it is desired to register, and also a fee of $10. But one thing else is to accompany all this and one which is the most important of all. This is either a label or outer package cover, or whatever is used to cover the goods sold, showing that the trade-mark for which registration is sought had been in actual use before the application is made. The length of time it has been used is immaterial—it may be ten years or even a single day.

There is, however, another way of securing the exclusive right to use a trade-mark, and that is by using it. If after it has been used on your goods, another attempts to use it likewise, he can be prosecuted on the ground of attempt at fraud under the common law. This is one instance in which the common law holds, and in which the claim of priority stands good. Of course it is to be proven that it is yours through actual use. When, then, is it necessary to go to the expense and trouble of obtaining registration for a trade-mark? The answer is twofold: When a trademark has been duly registered it is prima facie evidence that it is your property. In the case of suit, if your case is won, three times the cost of damages may be obtained, whereas in the other instance only damages could be obtained. In the case of winning the suit, too, all dits, copies, etc., of the trademark similar to yours would be destroyed. And perhaps most important of all is the fact that in the case of a registered trademark suit can be brought in the federal courts and the outcome thus made a public record.

SAYS COLLEGE BOYS HIT THE BOOZE

Chancellor Samuel Avery, of the University of Nebraska, Agrees With B. T. Crane as to Bibulous Tendency of Students.

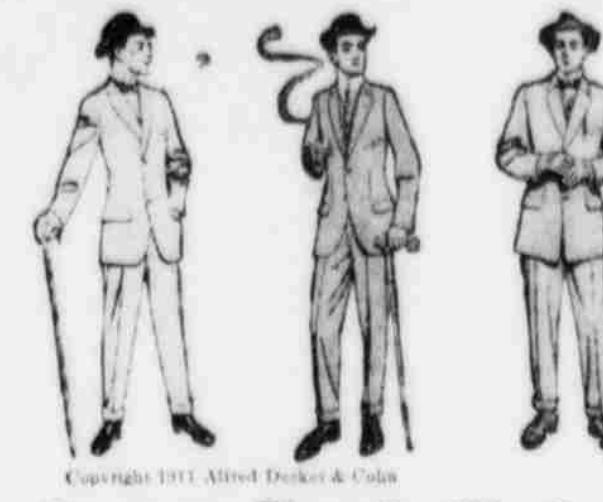

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 29.—Decries the abuse of intoxicants at university social functions, Chancellor Samuel Avery, at the convocation of the University of Nebraska today, said he agreed with a recent newspaper article by B. T. Crane of Chicago as to intertemporance in educational institutions.

"It is true," said Chancellor Avery, "that student life is everywhere characterized by some undesirable features, and always will be, since education cannot well be deferred until the student has acquired as adult as his parents. The great institutions of the east which Mr. Crane so fiercely attacked are far superior in point of morals to many institutions on the other side of the Atlantic and I believe that even a hostile critic would be obliged to concede that Nebraska and others which I might mention would hold a relatively high place in the moral scale."

The self-supporting student is the salvation of our western institutions both educationally and morally; and those unspeakable conditions which Mr. Crane describes as existing in some institutions, overdriven though it think they are, are largely due to the presence of the idle rich, whose influence everywhere is destructive to scholarship, to manhood and to womanhood."

As usually treated, a sprained ankle will disable a man for three or four weeks, but by applying Champlain's Liniment freely as soon as the injury is received, and observing the directions with each bottle, a cure can be effected in from two to four days. For sale by all druggists.

ENTRIES ARE POURING IN FOR THE NEW STATE'S BIG POULTRY SHOW

A PAIR OF FANCY BARRED ROCKS.

The success of the poultry show at the New Mexico State fair now threatens to exceed the expectations of John Rueh, superintendent of this important department. Mr. Rueh is today seriously considering beginning the work of building an annex to the poultry display hall. Entries have come in so rapidly during the last few days that the indications are that space will be a premium until Monday of next week, when is noon on Monday of fair week. Mr. Rueh is determined to have room for all comers, however, and if necessary he will cause to be built a "poultry show annex" which will adjoin the main poultry building. Entries are being made from various points in the southwest and there is every reason to believe that in quantity and quality the display of birds will be the finest in the history of New Mexico fairs. The many handsome silver cups and trophies hung up for prize displays are proving attractive to breeders.

All those who have not yet entered their birds and who intend to do so are requested by Superintendent Rueh to get busy at once. Entry blanks and full information will be gladly furnished by the capable and energetic superintendent, who will be sure to see that they are fairly returned to their originating point if owners or caretakers cannot accompany them.
